matter thus far have been without avail for 113 years the body of this great figure in our naval history was allowed to lie neglected in a distant land. Since being brought back to this country it has lain for five years equally neglected, stowed away like old lumber in a building at Annapolis, while every effort to have it placed in consecrated ground has been defeated.

The body was taken by the Government to Annapolis in the belief that the memories it would awaken would be an inspiration to the midshipmen of the Naval Academy Instead of that it is a reminder of a nation's humiliaring neglect of its herote defenders, a sad example to young men about to enter the naval service.

The question is not the erection of a monument to a hero's memory but the providing for John Paul Jones's remains a decent burial in consecrated ground in the country, he so eminently served. If England were guilty of dishonoring the body and memory of Nelson in such a manner she would justly incur the contempt. The Proposed Tariff Board.
To the Editors of The Six Sir The "leader" with the above heading in to-day's Six admirably states the difficulty of the inquiry as to the cost of production here and abroad. Conditions of climate, labor and transportation vary so in our country that moderate protection for the factories of one-state might said the second of the shows and of a snowsterm. cleaning procedure in all such cases, varying only with the depth of the snow, weather conditions following it, and the particular excuses for neglect of duty. First the householder, with admirable promptness, digs himself out, cleaning his sidewalk, stoop and gutter.
